

ABSTRACT

A computerized process by which an individual may generate family history information for use by a healthcare provider in determining whether the individual is a candidate for genetic testing prompts an individual to enter family history information and receive a computer-generated evaluation of that information. If the evaluation indicates that the individual is at risk of developing a genetically-linked illness, the process prompts the individual to schedule genetic counseling. Pending the result of the genetic counseling, genetic testing is scheduled for the individual.

ALL INFORMATION CONTAINED
HEREIN IS UNCLASSIFIED